FOR THE UNINITIATED TEACHER--

Popovich, James E. "Essential Considerations in the Teaching of Creative Dramatics," The Speech Teacher, VIII (November 1959), 283-287.

Basic philosophy and content for the course set out briefly and with detail.

Siks, Geraldine Brain. Creative Dramatics: An Art for Children. New York: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1958.

Basic text complete in theory and techniques, application of principles. The use of creative imagination of the child, guidance and qualities for the leader.

Ward, Winifred. Playmaking with Children, 2nd ed. New York: Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1957.

Delightful updating of the original edition which has been the basic text for ten years. This book is by far the best in the field.

Way, Brian. Development through Drama. New York: Humanities Press, Inc., 1967.

Ideas and details of practical experiences of drama with students. Suggestions for teachers to use while working with playmaking, improvisation, characterization, sensitivity, sound, rhythm, and imagination. Approaches creative dramatics from beginning exercises to episodes and scenes.

OTHER BOOKS--

Arlington, A. F. Drama and Education. Chester Springs, Pa.: Dufour Editions, Inc., 1961.

Originally published in Great Britain. Discusses drama, mime, literature, and improvisation in creative dramatics. Begins basically with "play" acting and ends with teacher training in colleges.

Andrews, Gladys. Creative Rhythmic Movement for Children. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, Inc., 1954.

Denotes the application of creative movement to develop freedom in playmaking. Preliminary techniques for creative dramatics.

*Supplemented by Lawana Trout, August 1971.

Barnfield, Gabriel. Creative Drama in Schools. London: Macmillan and Co. Ltd., 1968.

Detailed descriptions of creative dramatic activities direct from classroom experiences. This book is written from notes made up by the author after each of many sessions. One of the few books which explains in detail how to explore the world of creative drama. Comprehensive descriptions of techniques and methods, at all stages of work. Careful and detailed guidance for teachers new to creative dramatic activities in the classroom.

Barnes, Douglas. Drama in the English Classroom. NCTE, 1968.

A Dartmouth Seminar Paper written by Douglas Barnes, University of Leeds. Contains articles on democracy and education, drama in English teaching, and a secondary school drama syllabus and a discussion of drama in the primary school.

Burger, Isabel. Creative Play Acting, 2nd ed. New York: Ronald Press, 1966.

Includes pantomime, procedures in the development of creative plays with examples provided.

Cornwall, Paul. Creative Playmaking in the Primary School. London: Chatto and Windus, 1970.

Good model for exploring relationships between drama and writing, reading, and talking. Extensive description of one project with unstreamed class of 41 children. Tells how Homer's Odyssey became the stimulus for speaking, writing, painting, modeling, making individual study books, and other activities. Gives samples of children's writing and has photographs of them at work.

Courtney, Richard. Teaching Drama. London: Cassell and Co., Ltd., 1965.

A discussion of principles of dramatic method. Chapters on values, improvisation, movement and mime, and playmaking. Ends with bibliography on sources of materials.

Creative Dramatics, a special bulletin of the Association for Childhood Education, 1961.

Dodd, Nigel & Hickson, Winifred, ed. Drama and Theatre in Education. London: Heinemann Educational Books Ltd., 1971.

Good overview of British drama approaches from infant school through university level. Origin of book was a drama conference held at Clifton College, Bristol, England. Contributors treat specific themes: John Hodgson - literature and improvisation; Dorothy Heathcote - understanding drama; Veronica Sherborne - movement; John Hersee - the school play. Summaries of the discussions which followed the papers are given.

“Drama in Education,” a special issue of English in Education, I:3 (Autumn 1967). National Association for the Teaching of English.

An excellent collection of articles about drama in Great Britain's schools: elementary, secondary, and College of Education. Examples and materials for creative drama. Theory included and a bibliography.

Goodridge, Janet. Drama in the Primary School. London: Heinemann Educational Books Ltd., 1970.

Shows drama in the primary school as an extension of dramatic expression seen in play of young children. Specific suggestions for helping child through developing stages of drama. Help on selecting appropriate materials for these stages.

Henry, Mabel Wright, ed. Creative Experiences in Oral Language. Champaign, Ill.: NCTE, 1967.

A bulletin on the interpretive language arts prepared by the former NCTE Committee on Interpretive Arts in the Elementary School. Chapters on chorric interpretation, storytelling, creative dramatics, movement, rhythm, and suggestions for curriculum in oral interpretation.

Hodgson, John & Richards, Ernest. Improvisation. London: Methuen and Co., 1967.

Excellent source for ideas for improvising with and without a text.

Lowndes, Betty. Movement and Drama in the Primary School. London: B T Batsford Ltd., 1971.

Report of drama work carried out in North London Infants School. Topics include movement thinking, sensory awareness activities, body awareness, mime, and verbal drama improvisations.

Martin, William and Vallins, Gordon. Exploration Drama: Teacher's Book and four student texts. London: Evans Brother Ltd., 1968.

Best available texts for drama grades 1-8. Teacher's Book has detailed suggestions for drama experiments. Student's Books are great for stimulating drama activities on a broad range of topics: Carnival (children's games); Legend; Horizon; (adventure) and Routes (explorations).

Pemberton-Billing, R. N. and Clegg, J. D. Teaching Drama. London: University of London Press, 1969.

Detailed and imaginative suggestions for secondary work in movement, speech, and playmaking.

Ranger, Paul. Experiments in Drama. London: University of London Press, 1970.

Experiences in a Bermondsey primary school. Drama experiments with sound, words, poetry, and playmaking. Attempts to break through traditional subject barriers and use history and art, as well as movement and speech.

Siks, Geraldine Brain. Children's Literature for Dramatization. Evanston: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1964.

An anthology of poetry and stories for younger and older children.

Slade, Peter. Child Drama. Mystic, Conn.: Lawrence Verry, Inc., 1954.

Originally published in Great Britain. The unique use of creative dramatics concepts in all phases of child development and educational application.

Spolin, Viola. Improvisation for the Theater. Evanston: Northwestern University Press, 1969.

Background discussion of drama and theater. Workshop approach to creative drama with over 200 games for students of all ages.

Walker, Pamela. Seven Steps to Creative Dramatics. New York: Hill and Wang, 1957.

The development of child drama and play production initiated through creative dramatic procedures.

Ward, Winifred. Stories to Dramatize. Anchorage, Ky.: Children's Theatre Press, 1952.

Collection of stories graded to age and interest levels with suggested techniques for presentation and dramatization.

ARTICLES--

Bertram, Jean DeSales. "Creative Dramatics in the School," Elementary English, XXXV (December 1958), 515-518.

Consists of reports to a survey seeking the extent to which creative dramatics was used in elementary classrooms in Florida and Wisconsin. Describes creative experiences at first grade level.

Brack, Kenneth H. "Creative Dramatics: Why? How? When?" Elementary English, XXXVI (December 1959), 565-567.

Sees the teacher as the initiator of creative drama in the classroom at all levels. Considers this type of activity well worth the time involved, for it gives every child the chance to create spontaneously as he performs. Attempts to dispel the many fears that teachers may have for such a seemingly unstructured activity.

Burnett, Beatrice. "Traveling Salesman of English: Dramatic Activities in the Classroom," English Journal, 46 (February 1957), 81-83.

Model teacher in inservice program guides dramatic activities in eighth and ninth grade productions.

Busbee, Vivian. "Dramatic Interpretation in the Elementary School," Elementary English, XXXIV (October 1957), 394-396, 424.

Gives the importance of dramatic interpretation and values of using it in the classroom. This experience is usually neglected because of lack of time and failure of the teacher to see the value resulting from such situations.

Criste, Rita. "Creative Dramatics Demonstration," Educational Theatre Journal, I (December 1949), 105-106.

A report on a creative dramatics demonstration for the Annual Children's Theatre Conference and the results.

Crosby, Muriel. "Creative Dramatics as a Developmental Process," Elementary English, XXXIII (January 1956), 13-18.

Discusses relationship of creative dramatics to educational goals and the total development in the light of: 1. self-understanding, 2. relation to environment, 3. extension of living experience. Urges use of creative dramatics as a means of allowing the students to express themselves freely and creatively; attempts to clarify this often misunderstood approach.

Edmonds, Edith. "Dramatic Play from Books," Elementary English, XXX (March 1953), 159-162.

Categorizes 53 books from which stories can be chosen for dramatization.

Graubard, Paul S. "Pantomime: Another Language," Elementary English, XXXVII, (May 1960), 302-306.

Discusses uses of various types of mime: charades, fables, proverbs. A few basic ideas for classroom teachers.

Hill, Emily. "The Child's the Thing," National Education Association Journal, XLVI (January 1957), 36.

Seven steps of creative dramatics. Case illustrated. Teacher's role and selection of materials.

Keener, Beverly M. "Introducing Children to the World of Theatre," Elementary English, XLIII (December 1966), 892-893.

Describes a project in New Haven which gives experiences in children's theatre to children of low-income families.

Lettvin, Lorelei Joy. "Stories to Dramatize," Elementary English, XXXIX (December 1962), 766-769.

Reports a collection of material suitable for use in elementary classroom creative dramatics.

McIntyre, Barbara M. "Creative Dramatics," Education, 79 (April 1959), 459-498.

Discusses choice of material for creative dramatics in terms of suitability, preference by children in relationship to selections by adults, and quality for successful playing.

Miller, Edith F. "Dramatization and the Language Arts Program," Elementary English, XXIX (January 1952), 14-18.

Enumerates the following advantages of class dramatization of textbook and library book passages and poetry: (1) improvement in oral and written language, (2) improvement in oral and silent reading, (3) vocabulary enrichment, (4) development of an interest in good literature,

(5) improvement of diction, and (6) skill in using quotation marks. Dramatization may serve to generate interest in choral speaking and creative writing.

Miller, Irvin Bennett. "Creative Drama in Britain," Elementary English, XXXVI (January 1959), 25-27.

Describes the British system of education, where the children are taught in stages of development as shown by their progress rather than the progress of the textbook, via creative drama involving writing, taping, grammar usage, and critical evaluations.

Millicent, Sister M. "Creative Dramatics in the Classroom," Elementary English, XL (April 1963), 382-385, 389.

Promotes creative dramatics as an important activity for the development of the elementary school child.

Mortensen, Louise Hovde. "Creative Drama Place Exercises," Elementary English, XXXI (March 1954), 163.

Tells of Portia Boynton's Creative Workshop at Drake University. She used five senses as a basis for acting: What do I see? What do I hear? What do I taste? What do I touch? What do I smell?

Ogilvie, Mardel. "Creative Speech Experiences in the Elementary Schools," The Speech Teacher, VII (January 1958), 6-10.

Discusses many techniques for storytelling and its growth into creative drama activities.

Samuelson, D. "Why Not Take a Summer Course in Creative Dramatics," Instructor, LXV (June 1956), 65.

Defines creative dramatics in terms of teacher's need. Discusses multiple approaches and motivation, understanding of the child through creative experience.

Schwartz, Sheila. "New Methods in Creative Dramatics," Elementary English, XXXVI (November 1959), 484-487.

Tells of a program in creative arts, and gives the philosophy of the program director, at the Children's Center for Creative Arts at Adelphi College.

Ward, Winifred. "Teacher's Role in Creative Dramatics," Instructor, LXIV (February 1955), 35.

Methods of using creative dramatics illustrated by an example of "The Emperor's New Clothes." Evaluation techniques and devices for motivation.

Woods, Margaret S. "Learning through Creative Dramatics," Educational Leadership, XVIII (October 1960), 19-23.

Urges creative dramatics as a norm of developing purposeful living and promoting self-initiated activity. Author stresses the importance of training for the teacher in this activity.
